

Further reading list

Me and Emily have compiled this list with loads more recommendations all about statues, monuments and colonialism. There's no pressure to read any of them – it's just in case you found the session interesting and want to explore it further. You're likely to find them hard to understand at times, so please look at our guide to reading academic articles! If you have any questions about the readings or want to discuss the topic more with us, please email access-outreach@ouce.ox.ac.uk and Dan Hall can pass it on to us. For more resources, go to: <https://www.oxgeogsoc.com/prospectus> and don't forget to follow Oxford Geography Society on socials. Happy reading! :)

A word of warning: many of these sources contain discussions of colonial violence, suicide, death, slavery and/or racism. Whilst it is important to be aware of the problematic history behind public monuments, please stop reading if you are upset or worried and speak to someone about your feelings. It is totally normal to get emotional about these topics, but do not feel that you must read anything that makes you feel uncomfortable.

Statues in Oxford and England

- This article explores statues in London dedicated to the slave trade and why we know so little about how many there are: Dresser, M. (2007) Set in Stone? Statues and Slavery in London. History Workshop Journal, 64(1), pp.162-199. Available at: <https://academic.oup.com/hwj/article/64/1/162/600955>
- The Oxford Rhodes Must Fall Movement wrote a book in 2018 titled Rhodes Must Fall: The Struggle to Decolonise the Racist Heart of Empire. London: Zed Books. Chapter 10 was written by Oxford Geography lecturer Patricia Daley and is particularly relevant to our session.
- A recent article from Oxford's student newspaper about looted Cambodian artefacts still being held in the Ashmolean museum: <https://cherwell.org/2022/11/13/ashmolean-museum-questioned-over-looted-cambodian-artefacts/>
